Albert Frey, Swiss-born mid-20th century architect, was a significant force in the development of Modernism in the US. Through his innate curiosity about the American landscape, he developed an extraordinary design style, blending industrial techniques with a love of nature. First in a two-part series, this film explores Frey's formative years while working with Le Corbusier in Europe and his important transition to America, where 11 of his buildings are now on the National Register of Historic Places, including the Aluminaire House, the Canvas Weekend House, the New York Museum of Modern Art (MoMA), and the Kocher-Samson Building in Palm Springs. This film features Frey's early life up until 1939 and reveals why Frey stands as a powerful force in the development of modernism in the United States.

Directed by Jake Gorst & Tracey Rennie Gorst, 2018, USA, 63 Minutes
